A Pen Sketch of Tombstone as it Is

The Arizona Graphic in describing Tombetone truthfully says the once metropolis of the desert is about to come out of its present hypnotic taken from the article :-

"The town is admirably located and its altitude is such as to give it an Attorney G W Swain is moving his ideal climate both summer and winter. The town is "inland" lying 9 miles east of Fairbank.

"The delicious weather that has characterized the mountains of Arizona everywhere this win er made the drive from Fairbank to Tombatone as enjoyable as possible, although in midwinter, and at an elevation of near 4,000 feet. There is a pose of Capt McBlain one of the gallant dignity and an air of mystery in the officere of the ninth Cavalry of San distant, purple mountains; and a desolate splenpor to the desert waste and impresses him with his littleness. And there is an insidious energy in this wine-like mountain air that shoulders and makes the lungs men. England has already lost twice as many thousand and is as far from peurishment. . . "It was not the exhaustion of mineral which caused the abondonment of the mines in the district. On the contrary, the ore was at its richest when fire destroyed the great pumps necesthe merite of a wellknown ar up of eary to the operation of the mines, a : 1 various operators could never agree as to the rebuilding of the pumps. At the time of the collapse all the mines were working below the level, at 600 feet, and the Contention and Grand Central companies were Larkin W. The old Tombstene of the early '80s is probably known to everybody who reads English, and its record is one o blood and money. It was without doubt the "bottest" town on earth. slumber. The following extracts are and no autompt we ever made to k-ep tab on its killings. Ther was trouble all the time, for somebody was always looking for trouble, and had no difficulty in flosting it. The peaceable man was as sale from assault as he would have been in San Francisco. There was little drunkenness, and ! w fist fights. Whatever was worth quarreling about was worth settling with "guns." In one of the wellremembered killings, seven men, in two perties were engaged, three being killed, and the other four wounded. Ike and Billy Clanten and Tom and Billy McLowry, range men, constituted one party, and Wyatt and Virgil that calms the mind of the beholder Earp and Doc. Haliday, townsmen. the other. Their oparrel, whatever it was, culminated when all met, one morning in 1880, in front of the straightens back a pair of weak Epitaph office. The shooting began on eight, and after a few minutes struggle for more of the ethereal lead-pumping, the two McLowrys and Billy Clanton wer-dead in the street, and the other four men had more or less bullet holes in their bodies. Ike Clanton left the country and the feud was ended.

The duel, which did not occur, between Pat Hamilton, editor of the Independent, and Sam Pardy, editor of the Epitaph, marked an epoch in the wild times. The trouble graw out of an election for sheriff, in which J F Ward was the republic in candidate, the various persons interested, before Hamilton challenged Purdy to a duel. a noted duelist, who was a member of the Vigliance committee of San Franments vers made. The dust was to be at tifteen paces, with pistols. Tameeting place was Old Mexico. A crowd of perhaps 200 men went with the dueling party. The principals took their positions and at the last moment one of them fluked.
